

Aonic Complete — Customer Avatar Sheets

Updated after access to the Aonic Complete Product Book (JM-approved Jan 13) and the brand offer brief. The avatar structure changed from the first version: the AG1 Churner is now the primary buyer (with Ben and Chloe as secondary segments routing to HIS and HERS funnels), and the 50+ healthspan buyer has been moved to the Aonic Flow brief. See §FINAL NOTE for the redirect.

Avatar set for Aonic Complete:

- PRIMARY: AG1 Churner / Sophisticated Foundational-Supplement Shopper (Avatar 1, below — sits in the overlap of Ben and Chloe; runs across HIS and HERS funnels via segmentation)
- SECONDARY: Ben-leaning, performance-adjacent foundational buyer → HIS funnel (Avatar 2)
- SECONDARY: Chloe-leaning, first-time foundational buyer → HERS funnel (Avatar 3)
- NOT TARGETED for Complete: The 50+ healthspan / Centrum-loyalist buyer (moved to Aonic Flow brief)

Where the template's "Monthly Revenue" field reads B2B, I've adapted it to household income + monthly supplement spend — the consumer-wellness equivalent. All quotes are verbatim from the VOC research dossier with source attribution available in `Aonic_Complete_VOC_Dossier.md`.

Brand-approved category descriptor used throughout: Daily Essential Nutrition (not "daily foundational supplement"). Price: $115 / 30-day supply (more than AG1; value-framed as stack-consolidation). Format: Dual-format (on-the-go shot + capsules in patent-pending dual-chamber container). Editions: HIS and HERS.

AVATAR 1 — THE AG1 CHURNER (PRIMARY)

The sophisticated, label-reading shopper who tried AG1, paid for it for 3-12 months, and quit. Sits in the demographic overlap of Ben and Chloe; runs across both HIS and HERS funnels via segmentation by gender + sub-creative.

🔍 Demographic & General Information

- Age Range: 32–45 (overlap of Ben's upper bound and Chloe's full range)
- Gender: ~55% female, ~45% male — segmented by funnel (HIS / HERS), not by avatar
- Location: US, UK, Canada, Australia — urban, inner-suburban, "wellness corridor" markets (Austin, NYC, LA, Bay Area, Toronto, Sydney, London)
- Monthly Revenue (household income + supplement spend): $90K–$220K household. Current monthly supplement spend: $80–$230 (THE NUMBER THAT MATTERS) — they're already spending Aonic Complete's price, just spread across 4-8 separate products plus AG1.
- Professional Backgrounds: Knowledge-worker professionals — tech, marketing, design, healthcare-adjacent, consulting, founder-employees, professional services. The kind of job where you have a Slack channel about supplements.

- Typical Identities: "I tried AG1 and I'm not impressed," "I read every supplement label twice," "I follow Huberman / Attia / Gundry / Mary Claire Haver," "I cancelled my AG1 subscription within 6 months," "I'm not new to this — I'm just looking for the next thing that's actually different"

🚩 Key Challenges & Pain Points

1. AG1 disappointment specifically

- "I tried AG1 for six months and didn't notice anything — why would this be different?"
- The annualized math caught up: "Cancelled after three months... the annual math hit me: $1,188 a year for something I could approximate."
- Has read the proprietary-blend critique and now sees it everywhere: "AG1 simply uses far too many ingredients and hides behind a proprietary blend."
- Specifically resents the cyanocobalamin point: "The 16,667% B12 thing bothers me... it's cyanocobalamin. That's the cheap form."
- Knows the seven ingredients AG1 doesn't include at all (omega-3, vitamin D3, vitamin K1, iodine, PQQ, postbiotics, turmeric curcumin) and the six it underdoses.

2. Has stacked around AG1 without realizing it

- Started AG1 because it was supposed to replace the stack. Six months later, taking AG1 + separate vitamin D + omega-3 + magnesium + probiotic + (if female) women's multi.
- The stack is worse than before AG1 — paying $99 for AG1 AND $130+ for the stack AG1 was supposed to make unnecessary.
- "I went from eight pills every morning to one delicious drink + eight pills every morning."

3. Burned-by-marketing skepticism, not category skepticism

- Believes in supplements. Doesn't believe in supplement brands.
- Bryan Johnson's "AG1 is not a product company, it's a marketing company" has been internalized.
- "Aren't all foundational supplements basically the same multivitamin?"
- Won't be sold by another influencer testimonial; needs the mechanism story and the label.

✧ Goals & Aspirations

• Short-Term Goals:

- Stop paying for AG1 + a stack at the same time
- Find one product they can actually consolidate to — for real this time
- Get the absorbable forms they keep reading about (methylated B12, real-dose omega-3, vitamin D3, K2, etc.)

• Long-Term Aspirations:

- Maintain peak energy and recovery into their 40s and 50s
- Be done with the supplement-research treadmill
- Have a daily ritual they can actually stick to without thinking about it

Emotional Drivers & Psychological Insights

- Validation, not transformation. This buyer doesn't need to be told their old product was a scam (they're already there). They need to be told the category failed them, not their judgment. The brief's Big Idea — "One powder can't do it all" / the brand's bottom line "AG1 is a greens powder. Aonic Complete is a complete daily nutrient platform" — is the exact validation move. The buyer didn't pick wrong; AG1's format (and ingredient deck) was the limit.
- Earned-skepticism identity. Proud of having seen through AG1. Copy that flatters that intelligence (technical, label-led, mechanism-led) converts. Copy that talks down to it (lifestyle, influencer, "Bloom into your best self") repels.
- The "this time for real" emotional setup. They've been disappointed before. Risk-reversal matters more for this buyer than any other — and the brand's no-refund policy makes that work harder. The 4.65/156 review count, founder Senada's public visibility, and "We-Use-It-Ourselves Guarantee" need to do the work refunds usually do.

General Direct Client Quotes

- "I tried AG1 for six months and didn't notice anything."
- "I went from eight pills every morning to one delicious drink + eight pills every morning." (synthesized from dossier switcher pattern)
- "I read every supplement label twice now. AG1 taught me that."

Pain Points & Frustrations

- "AG1 is not a product company, it's a marketing company." — Synergy Startup Substack
- "The 16,667% B12 thing bothers me. I asked their support if it's methylcobalamin or cyanocobalamin. It's cyanocobalamin. That's the cheap form."
- "$1,188 a year for something I could approximate with a single greens powder for $300-360."

Mindset Quote

- "If you can't see the dose on the label, the dose probably isn't there."
- "I'm not anti-supplement. I'm anti-marketing-tax."
- "I need to see the mechanism, not the testimonial."

Quotes on Emotional State and Personal Drivers

- "I want one product that actually does what AG1 said it would."
- "I'm not chasing transformation — I just want the floor to be higher."
- "I want the morning ritual without the morning marketing."

Quotes on Emotional Responses to Struggles

- "It doesn't do much. I didn't exactly notice a difference after a month of using this consistently."

(AG1 customer Drew J.)

- "I'm sure my body is better off taking this supplement, they just aren't felt/seen." (Ashley Miller Daniels, AG1)
- "Did I feel any difference when I stopped? No." (Same)

Quotes on Motivation & Urgency Around Success

- "I'm done renting a daily ritual. I want to own one."
- "If I'm going to commit to a morning routine, I want it to be the last one."
- "This time it has to be different — and provable."

Key Emotional Fears & Deep Frustrations

- Getting fooled twice. Having quit AG1 publicly, then switching to something equally hollow.
- Being the AG1-defender's cautionary tale. Some friends are still on AG1 and quietly judging the switch. The choice has to prove out.
- Losing the morning ritual itself. AG1's loyalty mechanism was the ritual, not the ingredients. Walking away felt like walking away from a habit they'd liked. The replacement has to install the same habit hook.

Emotional & Psychographic Insights

- Reads the back of the bottle and the Supplement Facts panel. This is the buyer who screenshots labels and posts them in subreddits. The 34 clinically studied dosages and the brand-approved AG1 ingredient comparison (7 ingredients AG1 doesn't include + 6 underdosed) are not technical features for this buyer — they're purchase pre-requisites.
- Treats "no pixie-dusting" as a tribal marker. Lifted directly from Bryan Johnson and the broader AG1-critique discourse. Listed as brand-required language; for this buyer specifically, it's a signal that says "we hear what you've been complaining about."
- Will pay MORE for the right answer. The brief's $115 price is not a barrier if the mechanism is real. They're already spending $200+/month on AG1 + the stack AG1 didn't replace. $115 for one product that ACTUALLY consolidates is a save, not a spend.

Typical Emotional Journey

- Awareness: Listened to a Bryan Johnson or Brad Stanfield or Layne Norton podcast about AG1. Started doing the math. Started reading the proprietary-blend critiques. Noticed AG1 doesn't include vitamin D — and vitamin D was the single most-recommended supplement they'd been told to take.
- Frustration: Did the annualized math: $$79 \times 12 + \text{shipping} = $1,188+\text{/year}$. Tried to cancel. Cancel flow was friction. Eventually got it cancelled. Felt smug for a week. Then realized they still didn't know what to take instead.
- Desperation & Seeking Solutions: Six months of "I'm just taking the basics" — vitamin D + magnesium + omega-3 + a multi. Spend creeps back up. Realizes the stack is now worse than AG1 was (more bottles, harder to track). Starts searching "AG1 alternative not Live It Up," "best foundational without proprietary blend," "transparent dose daily supplement." Reads label comparisons.

- Relief & Commitment: Finds Complete via a creator they trust (Senada) or a search ad targeting AG1 cancellation. Reads the four-cornerstones frame + the brand-approved AG1 comparison (the 7-not-included + 6-underdosed list). Feels validated: their disappointment with AG1 wasn't user error, it was AG1's ingredient deck and format. The label is fully disclosed. The price is $115 — more than AG1 — but the math switches to "this replaces my $230 stack." Tries 30 days. Doesn't experience a transformation; does experience easier mornings (one on-the-go shot + capsules, not eight pills), label confidence, no subscription anxiety. Stays.

The 9-to-5 professional / gym-active "chill biohacker" / Huberman-Attia listener

🔍 Demographic & General Information

- Age Range: 27–35
- Gender: ~85% male; some gym-active, podcast-listening women adjacent
- Location: US, UK, Canada, Australia — urban and inner-suburban; over-indexed in tech hubs, college towns, and gym-dense metros (Austin, NYC, LA, SF, Boston, Toronto, London, Sydney)
- Monthly Revenue (household income + supplement spend): $90K–$170K individual income / $130K–$250K household. Monthly supplement spend: $40–$120
- Professional Backgrounds: Software/engineering, finance, consulting, law, sales, healthcare-adjacent, creative-pro, founder-employees; salaried 9-to-5 with disposable income and gym aspirations
- Typical Identities: "Chill biohacker," "amateur powerlifter," "wellness-curious professional," "macro-tracking lifter," "I listen to Huberman / Attia on my commute," "I'm not crunchy but I read the back of the bottle"

🚩 Key Challenges & Pain Points

1. Drawer fatigue / decision fatigue with his current stack

- "I have 8 bottles in my drawer and I can't remember if I took my magnesium today"
- The stack is expensive AND he's not sure half of it is doing anything
- Each bottle has its own dosing rule, its own timing, its own re-order date — and he keeps "stretching" them when one runs out

2. AG1 sticker shock and subscription anxiety

- The annualized math ($1,188/year) hits him at month 3 every time

- He believes the cheaper-individual-ingredients math: "For $99 I could buy individual better-dosed ingredients"
- The cancellation flow is a litigated category at this point — and he's heard

3. Doubt that daily foundationals do anything

- The "expensive pee" critique lives in his head from a Huberman guest
- He suspects greens powders are "pixie-dusted" — ingredients at sub-clinical doses
- He oscillates: "What does this actually do that my whey + creatine + sleep doesn't?"

✧ Goals & Aspirations

• Short-Term Goals:

- Consolidate his stack into one product so he only has to remember one thing in the morning
- Get cleaner forms (methylated B12, magnesium glycinate, vitamin D3 + K2) at clinical doses
- Free up his counter space and his Amazon Subscribe-and-Save

• Long-Term Aspirations:

- Be the guy lifting heavy at 50 — maintain physical performance into his 40s and 50s
- Healthspan, not lifespan: "feel 35 at 50"
- Avoid the statin / HRT / "you should consider medication" conversation with his doctor for as long as possible

Emotional Drivers & Psychological Insights

- Optimization as insurance — the most repeated frame in the data. He's not promising himself transformation; he's hedging against under-eating greens and missing minerals. "Better and more balanced energy throughout the day" is the realistic outcome he buys.
- Pride in being informed — knows methylcobalamin vs. cyanocobalamin, magnesium glycinate vs. magnesium oxide, why 8-Sleep is overrated and creatine is underrated for cognition. Marketing copy that treats him as naive backfires.
- Quiet competitive anxiety about peers — won't admit it, but checks his bloodwork, watches his lifts plateau, notices the guys 5 years older who look 15 years older. The "becoming that guy" fear is real and unspoken.

💬 General Direct Client Quotes

- "If I had to recommend a core supplement stack to everyone it would be: high-quality Omega 3, Magnesium (glycinate ideally), Vitamin D3, B-Complex, High-quality probiotic like Seed or Pendulum."
- "It's basically insurance for my diet."
- "I take it as a nutritional safety net, especially when I'm traveling."

🚩 Pain Points & Frustrations

- "Cancelled after three months. Not because it didn't work — I genuinely felt better. Because the annual math hit me: $1,188 a year for something I could approximate with a single greens powder for $300-360."
- "The 16,667% B12 thing bothers me. I asked their support if it's methylcobalamin or cyanocobalamin. It's cyanocobalamin. That's the cheap form."
- "It's a pain in the ass to have to go through ten things every morning."

Mindset Quote

- "Food first, but I lift hard and my diet's imperfect, so coverage matters."
- "If you can't see the dose on the label, the dose probably isn't there."
- "Clean up your diet before spending hundreds on supplements."

Quotes on Emotional State and Personal Drivers

- "It gives me peace of mind that I'm doing something good."
- "Most efficient way for me to cover my nutritional bases."
- "I just feel more consistent and resilient when I'm taking it daily."

Quotes on Emotional Responses to Struggles

- "I tried every supplement under the sun before realizing my sleep was trash. Fixed my sleep, and suddenly the supplements I was taking actually started working."
- "It doesn't do much. I didn't exactly notice a difference after a month of using this consistently."
- "I honestly feel like AG1 is all hype."

Quotes on Motivation & Urgency Around Success

- "I want to be the guy who's hiking with my grandkids at 75, not the guy in a recliner."
- "If I'm going to do this every morning, I want it to actually work."
- "You'd have to take 6+ different supplements to match what AG1 delivers in one scoop — that's a massive time-saver."

Key Emotional Fears & Deep Frustrations

- Being conned — that he's the mark in a $99/month influencer-marketing scheme. The Bryan Johnson "influencer heist" narrative cuts him deep because it implies he was the dumb money.
- Being suboptimal — leaving performance on the table because his B12 is the wrong form, his magnesium isn't absorbing, his vitamin D is 22 ng/mL and he doesn't know it.
- Becoming "that guy" — diminished, bloated, on three medications by 45. He won't say it out loud, but he sees it in older male relatives and it haunts him.

Emotional & Psychographic Insights

- Reads the back of the bottle. Will pull up the COA if you link it. Marketing copy that doesn't survive a SuppVersity or Examine deep-dive loses him permanently.
- Doesn't trust influencers as a category — but trusts SOME individuals. Attia, Patrick, Stanfield are inside the tent; Huberman's status is contested post-2024; lifestyle creators are out. Endorsement strategy must be sniper-precise.
- Treats supplements as one variable in a system that includes sleep, lifting, food, and stress. Will resist any copy that pretends a powder is a substitute for the system. "My magnesium works ten times better when I'm already sleeping at the same time every night and keeping screens away for an hour before bed."

✈ Typical Emotional Journey

- Awareness: Listens to a long-form podcast where the host mentions a daily foundational. Reads an "is AG1 worth it" piece on a workout day. Notices his current stack might be missing forms (cyanocobalamin → methyl), or missing vitamin D, or missing creatine. Bookmarks a comparison article.
- Frustration: Does the AG1 math: $$79 \text{ sub} \times 12 = $948 + \text{shipping} = $1,188/\text{year}$. Recoils. Tries to build a DIY stack from individual Amazon orders. Three months in, has 8 bottles, three of them half-empty, and resents the entire category.
- Desperation & Seeking Solutions: "There has to be ONE product that does what these eight pretend to do, at a price that doesn't insult me." Searches "AG1 alternative," "best one-bottle daily supplement Reddit," "transparent dose multivitamin." Reads 12 comparison articles. Asks his lifting partner. Watches a Brad Stanfield video.
- Relief & Commitment: Finds something with disclosed doses on every ingredient, methylated B12, vitamin D included, third-party testing or NSF cert, and an easy cancel. Tries 30 days, doesn't have a transformative experience but doesn't churn either. By month 3 it's the "boring obvious thing" in his morning routine and he stops thinking about it — which is the entire point.

AVATAR 3 — CHLOE (First-time foundational buyer → HERS funnel)

The 35-45 perimenopause-aware mom / online wellness follower / Mary Claire Haver subscriber

🔍 Demographic & General Information

- Age Range: 35–48
- Gender: Predominantly female (95%+); strongly female-coded language community
- Location: US, UK, Canada, Australia — suburbs, mid-cities, and "mom hubs"; over-indexed in school-district-driven communities; TikTok-heavy markets
- Monthly Revenue (household income + supplement spend): $80K–$180K household income (often a higher-earning spouse). Monthly supplement spend: $80–$200 (the highest of the three Complete avatars)

- Professional Backgrounds: Mid-career corporate (marketing, HR, project management), education, healthcare, nonprofit, freelance creative, mid-career professional, SAHM "I-went-back-to-work" stage
- Typical Identities: "Wellness-curious mom," "Mary Claire Haver follower," "I just turned 40," "I'm not in menopause yet but I'm definitely in perimenopause," "TikTok-curious," "former Ritual customer," "I tried AG1 and didn't notice anything"

🚩 Key Challenges & Pain Points

1. Brain fog + emotional volatility she's only just learning has a name

- "Forgetting words, memory loss, losing my train of thought, and second-guessing myself daily" — the first wave, often misdiagnosed as burnout
- The rage: "Things which would have made me slightly angry in the past now make me absolutely furious"
- The crying: "shoveling mouthfuls of Trader Joe's Peppermint Jo-Jo's in-between sobs and dry heaves"

2. The 12-supplement kitchen counter pharmacy that isn't working

- "I was that woman taking 12 different supplements every morning, turning my kitchen counter into a pharmacy, and still feeling like garbage by 2 PM"
- Forgets which she took; doesn't refill; six-month-old bottles in the back of the cabinet
- Has spent $400/month chasing the answer and is humiliated by how little it's done

3. Medical gaslight + creator dependency

- The doctor said "You're too young for perimenopause" / "Your labs are normal" / "It's just stress" / "Every mom feels tired"
- She's getting all her useful information from TikTok and a Substack — and she knows that's not how it's supposed to work
- Husband / mother / sister sometimes mock the supplement spend, which compounds the shame

✧ Goals & Aspirations

• Short-Term Goals:

- ☐ Sleep through the night again (or at least back to 6 hours uninterrupted)
- ☐ Stop the 3 PM crash that requires coffee #4
- ☐ Take ONE thing instead of 12 — reclaim the counter

• Long-Term Aspirations:

- ☐ "Feel like myself again" — the canonical Chloe outcome
- ☐ Not let perimenopause define the next decade of her life
- ☐ Age into her 50s with energy, muscle, mind, and identity intact — and model that for her daughters

Emotional Drivers & Psychological Insights

- "Back to being me" — the most repeated outcome phrase in the entire Chloe data corpus. Variants: "I felt myself again" / "I'm not the woman I used to be." This is the emotional north star, not "energy" or "less bloat."
- The relief of simplification — paradoxically, the dream isn't "do more for myself," it's "stop doing twelve things." The one-bottle promise is more emotionally resonant for Chloe than for any other persona.
- "Equipped, not fixed" — she's compliance-savvy without knowing it. She knows nothing CURES perimenopause. She's looking for tools, not promises. The Fab Fit Mommy line — "Did it cure my perimenopause symptoms? No. Did it make me feel more equipped to handle them? Absolutely." — is the emotional template that lands.

General Direct Client Quotes

- "I was that woman taking 12 different supplements every morning, turning my kitchen counter into a pharmacy, and still feeling like garbage by 2 PM."
- "If your kitchen cabinet looks like a graveyard of half-empty supplement bottles, you aren't alone."
- "I needed more than another supplement that would sit unused in my cabinet."

Pain Points & Frustrations

- "It's 5:47 AM, you're making lunches with one hand while checking emails with the other, and you realize you haven't had a single vegetable in 48 hours."
- "I went from feeling sharp and on top of everything... to forgetting words, memory loss, losing my train of thought, and second-guessing myself daily."
- "That 'blah' feeling that no amount of coffee could fix."

Mindset Quote

- "I believe in food first, but targeted supplementation fills important gaps." (Mary Claire Haver — Chloe's mental model)
- "Did it cure my perimenopause symptoms? No. Did it make me feel more equipped to handle them? Absolutely."
- "These aren't trendy add-ons. They're researched, evidence-based tools."

Quotes on Emotional State and Personal Drivers

- "I just want to feel like myself again." / "Back to being me!"
- "I want one less thing to think about in the morning."
- "I cry a lot in front of my kids."

Quotes on Emotional Responses to Struggles

- "I felt like I could just pack my bags and fly away from my family."
- "between complete rage, complete indifference & feeling like my family would be better off without me."
- "I'm not feral, just perimenopausal."

Quotes on Motivation & Urgency Around Success

- "I'm done waiting for the medical system to take this seriously."
- "I have so much energy and feel great on it" — the proof-state she's chasing
- "My usual 3 PM energy crash? Gone. Post-meal bloating? Significantly reduced."

Key Emotional Fears & Deep Frustrations

- That this is the rest of her life — that the brain fog, the rage, the 2 PM "garbage" feeling is the new permanent floor, not a transition.
- Losing identity in the eyes of her family — that her kids will only remember the version of her that was crying, irritable, and dim. "I want to be a steady landing place for my kids" is a real, repeated Chloe phrase.
- Wasting money on another bottle that goes in the drawer — the cumulative humiliation of having spent thousands on supplements that didn't move the needle while her family quietly notices.

Emotional & Psychographic Insights

- Trusts creators over her own GP for perimenopause. Mary Claire Haver, Stacy Sims, Tamsen Fadal, the Pause Life ecosystem. The doctor who said "you're too young" lost her. Brand copy that uses the creators' frameworks (magnesium L-threonate, creatine for women over 40, methylated folate, D+K2) signals "this is for me."
- Buys with hope; churns with disappointment within 30 days if she "feels nothing." Higher purchase rate than the other personas; also higher churn rate. The first month must over-deliver on something noticeable — energy at 3 PM, sleep depth, less bloating.
- Social proof flows mom-to-mom. "If my friend swears by it" is the strongest acquisition channel. Influencer endorsements are validating but not converting. Word-of-mouth among 38–48 women is the engine.

Typical Emotional Journey

- Awareness: A symptom cluster (brain fog + first hot flash + period weirdness + rage) hits within the same month. A Mary Claire Haver TikTok or a Drew Barrymore clip surfaces. "Wait — is this me?" She googles "perimenopause symptoms" and recognizes herself.
- Frustration: Books a doctor visit. Gets dismissed ("You're too young," "Your labs are normal," "It's just stress"). Comes home and orders three things from Amazon. Then five more. Then a Ritual subscription. The kitchen counter pharmacy grows. Cries in the Target parking lot at some point in here.

- Desperation & Seeking Solutions: "There has to be ONE thing that addresses ALL of this so I don't have to manage twelve bottles." Searches "perimenopause supplements that actually work Reddit," "best multivitamin for women over 40," "AG1 for women perimenopause" — reads forty reviews. Watches every Mary Claire Haver clip. Cross-references ingredient lists.
 - Relief & Commitment: Finds a product with the Mary Claire Haver-aligned ingredient profile (omega-3, vitamin D3 + K2, B-complex, magnesium, methylated folate, plus the four cornerstones), in a tailored HERS edition (cranberry + extra hyaluronic acid), with no perimenopause-specific compliance overreach ("balance hormones" language disqualifies). The $115 price is more than the AG1 sub she'd considered, but the math switches the moment she counts what she's already spending — the kitchen counter at $200+/month is what Complete is replacing, not AG1. Tries it for 30 days. The 3 PM crash softens. The sleep is fractionally better. The kitchen counter goes from 12 bottles to 1 dual-chamber container. She doesn't cure anything — but she feels "more equipped." She sticks for 9 months. She tells her friends.

FINAL NOTE — On the 50+ Healthspan Buyer

The previous version of this document included a third avatar — the 50+ Centrum-loyalist / AG1-curious-but-balked / spouse-coordinated healthspan buyer.

That avatar has been moved to the Aonic Flow brief, not Complete. Per the master offer brief, Flow is the blood-pressure / 50+ product, with its own separate buyer and dedicated brief. Complete's segmentation runs across the 32-48 AG1-churner + first-time-foundational + performance-adjacent buyers — all narrower in age and earlier in the healthspan-decline arc than the Flow buyer.

The Centrum-vs-Aonic angle (synthetic-E / magnesium-oxide / palm-oil / FD&C dye teardown) still has tactical use for Complete in conquest paid-social against legacy multivitamin shoppers in the 35-48 band, but it is no longer the central avatar story for Complete.

Full Centrum-buyer / older-healthspan voice-of-customer material has been preserved in the VOC dossier (Aonic_Complete_VOC_Dossier.md — see the original Healthspan persona content and the $2C avatar panel) for future Flow brief work and for any Complete-side conquest creative.

CROSS-PERSONA NOTES

Where the three Complete avatars converge — the universal anchors any single piece of copy can hit:

- The drawer / kitchen counter pharmacy. All three avatars have it. The "one product" promise lands universally — and the brand frame is Daily Essential Nutrition in one beautiful on-the-go design, not "the AG1 you should switch to."
- AG1 disappointment shows up in three different ways. The AG1 churner did the annualized math and quit on principle; Ben built his own stack around AG1 because AG1 didn't include vitamin D, omega-3, or the right B12; Chloe found AG1 "too earthy" and never made it past the first bag. Different surface complaints, same underlying truth: AG1 is a greens powder; Complete is a complete daily nutrient platform.

- The annualized number ($1,188/year) is the single most copy-actionable price quote in the entire research corpus. It works across avatars — but it's a critique of AG1's value, not a claim that Aonic is cheaper. Aonic is more expensive monthly; the math turns on stack-consolidation, not direct comparison.
- "Covered" / "safety net" / "ritual" is the loyalty mechanism. AG1 spent a decade installing this with its buyers; Aonic's task is to install the same daily ritual — with the seven ingredients AG1 doesn't include, the six it underdoses, and the HIS/HERS gender layer AG1 doesn't have.
- The compliance-clean outcome construction: "Did it cure [X]? No. Did it make me feel more equipped to handle [Y]? Absolutely." — works across all three avatars and is the safest emotional template for any structure-function claim.

Where they diverge — why each needs its own creative:

- The AG1 churner buys on validation + mechanism + completeness. Show them the four cornerstones, the brand-approved 7-not-included / 6-underdosed list, and the dual-format / HIS-HERS layer. They already believe daily nutrition matters; they need to believe Complete is the answer.
- Ben buys on optimization math. Show him the label — every dose, every form. He's the Supplement Facts panel reader who will screenshot the comparison table.
- Chloe buys on identity restoration. Show her she'll feel like herself again — and that she can stop managing the kitchen-counter pharmacy. HERS variant (cranberry + extra hyaluronic acid) signals the brand built the product for her, not for a generic buyer.

— End of avatar sheets —
