

Aonic Complete — Offer Brief Adaptations

---

Source brief: Aonic Complete - Offer Brief.pdf (19 pages) Adapting against: the VOC dossier, the three-avatar sheet, and the six-belief architecture from prior steps in this thread.

The original brief is structurally excellent and does not need to be rebuilt. This document does three things:

1. Builds the dedicated AG1-churner avatar the brief calls for in Next Steps #2 (the gap the brief itself flags as primary).
2. Updates the headline, objection, and belief sections with verbatim VOC language where the brief explicitly noted "real research will surface more precise versions in customer voice."
3. Corrects three places where my earlier work contradicts what this brief reveals about the actual product — most importantly, the price.

Everything else in the brief stands as written.

---

UPDATE — Brand-Approved Product Book (JM, Jan 13)

Added after the Aonic Complete Product Book was received. This section is the new source of truth and supersedes any earlier inferred product or competitive framing in this document or the original offer brief where the two conflict.

Brand-approved category descriptor

"Daily Essential Nutrition" — not "daily foundational supplement," not "daily multivitamin," not "greens powder." Brand-approved sub-line: "(In One Beautiful On-The-Go Design.)"

This changes the Big-Idea framing slightly:

- The offer brief's working Big Idea — "One powder can't do it all" — is still strong and category-correct.
- The brand-approved version layers it differently: "AG1 is a greens powder. Aonic Complete is a complete daily nutrient platform." This is now the single most copy-actionable comparative line and should be the spine of any AG1-comparison creative.

Brand-approved tagline

"Help fill your nutrition gaps with Aonic Complete — delivering 34 key ingredients at scientifically studied levels, no 'pixie-dusting,' to support overall health & well-being, immune support, and all-day performance."

This is the brand-approved structural argument in one sentence. Mine it for sub-headlines, ad copy, and the H1 on the landing page.

Brand-approved AG1 vs. Aonic Complete teardown — the strongest single ## competitive asset

The original offer brief had the AG1-comparison framing right at the strategic level but did not include the specific ingredient deltas. The Product Book provides them. This is the brand-approved factual teardown to use in headlines, objection-handling, advertorial body copy, and the comparison-table LP:

Where AG1 is at parity with Aonic Complete (3 things):

- Superfoods, Greens, Fruits, Herbs ✓
- Probiotic blend ✓
- 20mg Zinc ✓

Where Aonic Complete delivers at clinical dose, AG1 does NOT include at all (7 ingredients):

- 1g Omega-3 Fish Oil
- 50mcg Vitamin D3
- 200mcg Vitamin K1
- 180mcg Iodine
- 20mg PQQ
- Postbiotics (450mg Tributyrin)
- 500mg Turmeric Curcumin

Where AG1 includes but underdoses (6 ingredients):

- 1.5mg Vitamin A
- 150mg Vitamin E
- 200mcg Chromium
- 5g Inulin Prebiotic Fiber
- 5mg Biotin
- 200mg CoQ10

HIS/HERS gender layer (zero AG1 equivalent):

- HERS: 90mg Cranberry extract + 80mg Hyaluronic Acid
- HIS: 15mg Lycopene + 6mg Boron

Format/UX: Aonic Complete's "beautiful on-the-go design & great taste" vs. AG1's "messy powder, weird taste"

Brand-approved bottom-line statement (verbatim — use as the closing line in any long-form AG1 comparison):

"AG1 is a greens powder. Aonic Complete is a complete daily nutrient platform — every ingredient at its scientifically studied dose. The three things AG1 does well, Aonic Complete does too. The fifteen-plus things Aonic Complete does, AG1 either doesn't do at all or doesn't do enough."

Brand-approved 4 Cornerstones of Daily Essential Nutrition

The structural spine of the product story (use in long-form copy, landing-page anchor sections, and the four-cornerstones diagram):

1. Multivitamins & Minerals

2. Pre-, Pro- & Postbiotics
3. Omega 3
4. Superfoods & Greens

Brand-approved 6 Core Benefits (HIS & HERS shared) + gender-variant benefits

The benefit list with specific ingredient backing — use in landing page benefit grids, ad creative bullet structures, and FAQ pages:

| Benefit                                                       | Ingredient backing                                                         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 4-in-1 Daily Immune Support                            | Vitamin C, Vitamin D3, Zinc, Selenium                                      |
| Cellular Energy Support                                | High-potency B-complex, CoQ10, Iodine                                      |
| Smooth Digestion for Everyday Gut Health               | 5g prebiotic fiber, 14 billion CFU probiotics, 450mg tributyrin postbiotic |
| Supports Brain Health &amp; Function                   | Omega-3 DHA, CoQ10, B-vitamins (NEVER "focus")                             |
| Healthier Skin, Hair, and Nails                        | Biotin, Vitamin A, Vitamin C, Zinc (+ Hyaluronic Acid for HERS)            |
| Supports Heart and Joints Health for Lifelong Wellness | Omega-3s, Vitamin K2, CoQ10, bioactive Turmeric                            |

HERS exclusive: Urinary Tract Health (cranberry) + Hair, Skin & Nails extra boost (hyaluronic acid + biotin) HIS exclusive: Prostate Health (lycopene) + Vitality & Bone Strength (boron)

Updated headline candidates anchored in the Product Book

The offer brief's existing headline list still stands. New brand-approved-language headlines to add to the test set:

Lead headlines:

- "AG1 is a greens powder. Aonic Complete is a complete daily nutrient platform." (the brand's own bottom-line — strongest standalone line in the entire research stack)
- "34 key ingredients. Scientifically studied levels. No pixie-dusting."
- "Daily Essential Nutrition — in one beautiful on-the-go design."
- "The 7 ingredients AG1 doesn't include. The 6 it underdoses. And the gender layer it doesn't have at all."

AG1-comparison body-copy hooks:

- "On three things — superfoods, probiotics, and 20mg of zinc — AG1 matches Aonic Complete. On the other fifteen, it doesn't."
- "AG1 has no Omega-3. No Vitamin D. No Vitamin K1. No Iodine. No PQQ. No postbiotics. No turmeric. Aonic Complete has all seven — at clinically studied doses."
- "The fifteen-plus things Aonic Complete does, AG1 either doesn't do at all or doesn't do enough."

HERS-specific (Chloe-leaning):

- "What women in their late 30s wish their daily foundation actually included — including cranberry, hyaluronic acid, and 1g of omega-3."
- "Hair, skin, nails, gut, urinary tract, and real-dose omega-3 — in one daily ritual."

HIS-specific (Ben-leaning):

- "34 ingredients. Scientifically studied dosages. Lycopene for prostate. Boron for bone. Zero pixie-dusting."
- "Built for men. Approved by men who actually read the label."

Updated objection answers using brand-approved facts

The offer brief's objection list stands. Below are answer scripts for the most converting objections, anchored in brand-approved Product Book facts:

Q: "Isn't this just AG1 in a fancier package?" A: "AG1 has 20mg of zinc. We have 20mg of zinc. AG1 has superfoods and probiotics. We have those too. That's where the overlap ends. AG1 has no Omega-3, no Vitamin D, no Vitamin K1, no Iodine, no PQQ, no postbiotics, no turmeric — seven ingredients we deliver at clinically studied doses. And we make tailored HIS and HERS editions. AG1 doesn't."

Q: "$115/month for a foundational supplement? That's more than AG1." A: "It is more than AG1's $79 subscription. It's also less than what you're currently spending if you're taking AG1 plus a separate vitamin D, plus a fish oil, plus a probiotic. Most AG1 customers are. Complete consolidates that $200+/month stack into one $115 box."

Q: "Aren't all foundational supplements basically the same multivitamin?" A: "A multivitamin covers one of the four cornerstones of daily essential nutrition. Aonic Complete covers all four: multivitamins and minerals, pre/pro/postbiotics, omega-3, and superfoods and greens. At scientifically studied dosages — not pixie-dusted."

Q: "Will this cure [condition]?" (compliance-aware non-objection — DO NOT confirm or deny disease claims) A: "Aonic Complete is not intended to diagnose, treat, cure, or prevent any disease. It supports daily wellness by delivering 34 key nutrients at scientifically studied levels." (Brand-required disclaimer per Product Book.)

Brand-required compliance language (re-confirmed from Product Book)

The mandatory FDA disclaimer for every structure-function claim:

"These statements have not been evaluated by the Food and Drug Administration. This product is not intended to diagnose, treat, cure, or prevent any disease."

All other brand-required language anchors from the original offer brief (Made in USA with globally sourced ingredients / clinically studied dosages / no pixie-dusting / We-Use-It-Ourselves Guarantee / Brain Health & Function not "focus" / Immune Support not "boost" / etc.) are re-confirmed by the Product Book.

---

CRITICAL CORRECTIONS TO MY PRIOR WORK

Before adapting anything else, three things in the VOC dossier and avatar sheets need to be walked back, because the offer brief reveals product realities the public research couldn't see:

Correction 1 — Pricing framing was wrong

My dossier said: Aonic Complete is "a fraction of AG1's price"; "we charge a third of that"; "you shouldn't have to pay $99/month for ingredients you can see."

The brief reveals: Aonic Complete is $115/30-day supply — more expensive monthly than AG1's $79 sub / $99 one-time.

The actual value framing (per brief): Complete consolidates ~$230/month of separate-product spend into one box; ~$1,800/year savings vs. building the equivalent stack à la carte. The brand is not competing with AG1 on price; it's competing with the cost of a multi-supplement stack that an AG1 user is already augmenting AG1 with (a fish oil, a vitamin D, a probiotic, a women's multi, etc.).

Operational fix:

- Drop "fraction of AG1's price" from any copy briefed off the dossier.
- Replace with: "$115 replaces $230+ of separate bottles." / "More than AG1. Less than the stack you're building around AG1."
- The Ben avatar's "$1,188 a year for something I could approximate with a single greens powder for $300-360" still works — but it's a critique of AG1, not a price claim Aonic should mirror. Aonic's pitch is "AG1 doesn't replace your stack. Complete does."

Correction 2 — Aonic Complete is dual-format, not a single product

My dossier and avatar sheets treated Complete as a single-format daily (implicitly, a powder or capsule). The brief reveals it is a dual-phase ritual: 1.1 oz liquid shot + 3 softgels + 1 capsule, in a patent-pending dual-chamber container. This is the entire mechanism. Every avatar pain point, headline, and belief in this adaptation has to bend around it.

The Big Idea — "One powder can't do it all." — is the strongest single line in the brief and is the line every piece of creative should be testable against.

Correction 3 — The 50+ healthspan buyer is Flow's audience, not Complete's

The brief explicitly notes Aonic Flow has its own (separate) brief for the blood-pressure / 50+ buyer. My third avatar — the older healthspan buyer / Centrum loyalist / spouse-influenced — belongs primarily to Flow, not Complete.

For Complete specifically, the avatar set is:

1. AG1 Churner / Sophisticated Foundational-Supplement Shopper (PRIMARY — built below)
2. Chloe-leaning first-time foundational buyer (SECONDARY → HERS funnel)
3. Ben-leaning performance-adjacent foundational buyer (SECONDARY → HIS funnel)

The healthspan-buyer avatar I wrote stays in the master research file for future Flow work but should not drive Complete creative.

---

NEW AVATAR — THE AG1 CHURNER (Complete's primary buyer)

Distinct from Ben/Chloe; sits in their overlap. This is the avatar the brief asks for in Next Steps #2.

🔍 Demographic & General Information

- Age Range: 32–45 (overlap of Ben's upper bound and Chloe's full range)
- Gender: ~55% female, ~45% male — runs across HIS and HERS funnels. The brand will segment per funnel; the avatar itself is gender-mixed.
- Location: US, UK, Canada, Australia — urban, inner-suburban, "wellness corridor" markets (Austin, NYC, LA, Bay Area, Toronto, Sydney, London)
- Household income + supplement spend: $90K–$220K household. Current monthly supplement spend: $80–$230 (THIS IS THE NUMBER THAT MATTERS) — they're already spending Complete's price, just spread across 4-8 separate products plus AG1.
- Professional Backgrounds: Knowledge-worker professionals — tech, marketing, design, healthcare-adjacent, consulting, founder-employees, professional services. The kind of job where you have a Slack channel about supplements.
- Typical Identities: "I tried AG1 and I'm not impressed," "I read every supplement label twice," "I follow Huberman / Attia / Gundry / Mary Claire Haver," "I cancelled my AG1 subscription within 6 months," "I'm not new to this — I'm just looking for the next thing that's actually different"

🚩 Key Challenges & Pain Points

1. AG1 disappointment specifically

- "I tried AG1 for six months and didn't notice anything — why would this be different?" (objection from brief, p.13)
- The annualized math caught up: "Cancelled after three months... the annual math hit me: $1,188 a year for something I could approximate."
- Has read the proprietary-blend critique and now sees it everywhere: "AG1 simply uses far too many ingredients and hides behind a proprietary blend."
- Specifically resents the cyanocobalamin point: "The 16,667% B12 thing bothers me... it's cyanocobalamin. That's the cheap form."

2. Has stacked around AG1 without realizing it

- Started AG1 because it was supposed to replace the stack. Six months later, they're taking AG1 + a separate vitamin D + an omega-3 + a magnesium + a probiotic + (if female) a women's multi.
- The stack is worse than before AG1 because now they're paying $99 for AG1 AND $130 for the stack AG1 was supposed to make unnecessary.
- "I went from eight pills every morning to one delicious drink + eight pills every morning."

3. Burned-by-marketing skepticism, not category skepticism

- Believes in supplements. Doesn't believe in supplement brands.
- Bryan Johnson's "AG1 is not a product company, it's a marketing company" has been internalized.

- "Aren't all foundational supplements basically the same multivitamin?" (objection from brief)
- Won't be sold by another influencer testimonial; needs to see the label and the mechanism story.

✧ Goals & Aspirations

• Short-Term Goals:

- Stop paying for AG1 + a stack at the same time
- Find one thing they can actually consolidate to — for real this time
- Get the absorbable forms they keep reading about (methylated B12, magnesium glycinate, D3 + K2, real-dose omega-3)

• Long-Term Aspirations:

- Maintain peak energy and recovery into their 40s and 50s
- Be done with the supplement-research treadmill
- Have a daily routine they can actually stick to without thinking about it

Emotional Drivers & Psychological Insights

- Validation, not transformation. This avatar doesn't need to be told their old product was a scam (they're already there). They need to be told the category failed them, not their judgment. The brief's UMP — "Single-format powders force compromises your body pays for" — is the exact validation move. The buyer didn't pick wrong; AG1's format was the limit.
- Earned-skepticism identity. This buyer is proud of having seen through AG1. Copy that flatters that intelligence (technical, label-led, mechanism-led) converts. Copy that talks down to it (lifestyle, influencer, "Bloom into your best self") repels.
- The "this time for real" emotional setup. They've been disappointed before. Their guard is up. Risk-reversal matters more for this buyer than any other — and the brand's no-refund policy makes that work harder, not easier. The 4.65/156 review count, founder accessibility, and "We-Use-It-Ourselves Guarantee" need to do the work refunds usually do.

💬 General Direct Client Quotes

- "I tried AG1 for six months and didn't notice anything."
- "I went from eight pills every morning to one delicious drink + eight pills every morning." (synthesized from the dossier's switcher pattern — confirm verbatim source in next pass)
- "I read every supplement label twice now. AG1 taught me that."

🚩 Pain Points & Frustrations

- "AG1 is not a product company, it's a marketing company." — Synergy Startup Substack
- "The 16,667% B12 thing bothers me. I asked their support if it's methylcobalamin or cyanocobalamin. It's cyanocobalamin. That's the cheap form."
- "$1,188 a year for something I could approximate with a single greens powder for $300-360."

Mindset Quote

- "If you can't see the dose on the label, the dose probably isn't there."
- "I'm not anti-supplement. I'm anti-marketing-tax."
- "I need to see the mechanism, not the testimonial."

Quotes on Emotional State and Personal Drivers

- "I want one product that actually does what AG1 said it would."
- "I'm not chasing transformation — I just want the floor to be higher."
- "I want the morning ritual without the morning marketing."

Quotes on Emotional Responses to Struggles

- "It doesn't do much. I didn't exactly notice a difference after a month of using this consistently." (AG1 customer Drew J.)
- "I'm sure my body is better off taking this supplement, they just aren't felt/seen." (Ashley Miller Daniels, AG1)
- "Did I feel any difference when I stopped? No." (Same)

Quotes on Motivation & Urgency Around Success

- "I'm done renting a daily ritual. I want to own one."
- "If I'm going to commit to a morning routine, I want it to be the last one."
- "This time it has to be different — and provable."

Key Emotional Fears & Deep Frustrations

- Getting fooled twice. Having quit AG1 publicly (Slack channel, Instagram story, friend group), then switching to something equally hollow.
- Being the AG1-defender's cautionary tale. Some friends are still on AG1 and quietly judging them for switching. The switch has to prove out.
- Losing the morning ritual itself. AG1's loyalty mechanism was the ritual, not the ingredients. Walking away from AG1 felt like walking away from a habit they'd liked. The replacement has to install the same habit hook.

Emotional & Psychographic Insights

- Reads the back of the bottle and the Supplement Facts panel. This is the buyer who screenshots labels and posts them in subreddits. The patent-pending dual-chamber design and the 34-ingredient breakdown are not technical features for this buyer — they're purchase pre-requisites.
- Treats "no pixie-dusting" as a signal of brand alignment. This phrase, lifted directly from Bryan Johnson and the broader AG1-critique discourse, is a tribal marker. The brief lists it as brand-required language; for the AG1 churner specifically, it's a tribe-signal that says "we hear what you've been complaining about."

- Will pay MORE for the right answer. This is the key reframe. The brief's $115 price is not a barrier for this buyer if the mechanism is real. They're already spending $200+/month on AG1 + the stack AG1 didn't replace. $115 for one product that ACTUALLY consolidates is a save, not a spend.

✦ Typical Emotional Journey

- Awareness: Listened to a Bryan Johnson or Brad Stanfield or Layne Norton podcast about AG1. Started doing the math. Started reading the proprietary-blend critiques. Noticed AG1 doesn't include vitamin D — and Vitamin D is the single most-recommended supplement they'd been told to take.
- Frustration: Did the annualized math:  $$79 \times 12 + \text{shipping} = $1,188\text{+/year}$ . Tried to cancel. Cancel flow was friction. Eventually got it cancelled. Felt smug for a week. Then realized they still didn't know what to take instead.
- Desperation & Seeking Solutions: Six months of "I'm just taking the basics" — vitamin D + magnesium + omega-3 + a multi. Spend is creeping back up. Realizes the stack is now worse than AG1 was (more bottles, harder to track). Starts searching "AG1 alternative not Live It Up," "best foundational without proprietary blend," "transparent dose daily supplement." Reads label comparisons.
- Relief & Commitment: Finds Complete via a creator they trust (Senada, or a label-reading content creator), or via search-ad targeting "AG1 cancellation." Reads the dual-format mechanism — "One powder can't do it all" — and feels the validation: their disappointment with AG1 wasn't user error, it was the format's limit. The label is fully disclosed. The dose math passes the screenshot test. The price is $115 — more than AG1 — but the brain switches to "this replaces my $230 stack." Tries 30 days. Doesn't experience a transformation. Does experience: easier mornings (one ritual, not eight pills), label confidence, no subscription anxiety. Stays.

HEADLINES — adapted with verbatim VOC

The brief's existing headline list is strong on architecture, but flagged that "verbatim AG1-churner language for headlines" was missing. Here are headline candidates anchored in actual VOC, organized by the brief's existing categories. Original brief headlines remain valid; these are additions or VOC-tightened versions to A/B against.

Lead headlines (AG1-churner primary)

Original brief leads stand. VOC-grounded additions to test:

- "You didn't fail your last greens powder. The powder failed your body."
- "AG1 isn't wrong. It's just a powder." (Pairs with the brief's "One powder can't do it all" Big Idea — softer, less combative)
- "$1,188 a year for one powder. Or $115 a month for a system that actually replaces your stack." (Direct AG1 price-reframe — frames Complete as the higher-priced answer to a more expensive problem)
- "The Harvard-trained scientist behind your next morning ritual asked a simple question: what if one format isn't enough?" (Mechanism + guru, Dr. Jan voice)

- "The morning ritual you wanted from AG1, in the format AG1 can't deliver."

Chloe-leaning / HERS-friendly

Original brief: "What women in their late 30s wish their daily foundation actually included." — strong. VOC additions:

- "You don't need 12 bottles. You need one ritual that doesn't pretend the kitchen counter is a pharmacy." (Verbatim hook: "I was that woman taking 12 different supplements every morning, turning my kitchen counter into a pharmacy" — Fab Fit Mommy)
- "Back to being me — without the drawer full of half-empty bottles."
- "What Mary Claire Haver wants you to take. In one box." (If creator-cleared. If not, use the ingredient names instead: "Magnesium L-threonate. D3+K2. Real-dose omega-3. Creatine for women over 40. In one daily ritual.")
- "The 3 PM crash doesn't have to be your personality."

Ben-leaning / HIS-friendly

Original brief: "Two formats. 34 ingredients. Zero pixie-dusting." — strong. VOC additions:

- "Read every label. Then read this one."
- "Methylated B12. Vitamin D included. No proprietary blend. The label AG1 wouldn't show you."
- "You're already stacking around AG1. Stop renting a powder. Buy the actual system."
- "For people who built their own stack, then realized that's the problem."

AG1-comparison-friendly (paid social, search ads)

Original brief options stand. VOC additions:

- "AG1 is a marketing company. Complete is a product company." (Note: brief's compliance flags advise against naming competitors as "a marketing company" in paid social — use as advertorial body copy or organic creator content, not paid headlines.)
- "Same morning ritual. Different format. Different math."
- "You cancelled AG1 for a reason. Here's what that reason was."

---

OBJECTIONS — adapted with verbatim customer voice

The brief's objection list is comprehensive. Below are verbatim customer-voice replacements for the inferred objections, organized to the brief's categories. The brand can swap these into the brief's objection map for higher fidelity.

Skepticism / "does it work" — verbatim VOC

The brief's wording is mostly already verbatim-feeling. Tightened with mined language:

- "I tried AG1 for six months and didn't notice anything — why would this be different?" (brief — keep)

- "It doesn't do much. I didn't exactly notice a difference after a month of using this consistently." (Drew J., AG1 — verbatim replacement)
- "I'm sure my body is better off taking this supplement, they just aren't felt/seen." (Ashley Miller Daniels — captures the high-skepticism buyer's resignation)
- "Most supplements do not prevent chronic disease or death." (Annals of Internal Medicine via Scientific American — the deep skeptic this avatar quotes to themselves)
- "Just EAT YOUR DAMN VEGGIES!" (Aparna Jain — the loud-skeptic friend in the buyer's network they're rebutting in their head)

AG1-specific (the elephant) — verbatim VOC

- "Why do I need a liquid AND capsules? Isn't one bottle the whole point?" (brief — keep, very strong)
- "AG1 is not a product company, it's a marketing company." (Synergy Startup — the buyer's own internalized critique that gives them permission to switch)
- "The 16,667% B12 thing bothers me. I asked their support if it's methylcobalamin or cyanocobalamin. It's cyanocobalamin. That's the cheap form."
- "AG1 explicitly does not include vitamin D — the single most common deficiency in populations most likely to buy AG1." (ConsumerLab)
- "AG1 was a bit too gritty and earthy for me... tasted like blended vegetables mixed with dirt."

Price / commitment — verbatim VOC + reframe

The brief flagged this as critical given Aonic is more expensive than AG1. VOC additions:

- "$115/month for a foundational supplement? That's more than AG1." (brief — keep, this is THE objection)
- "due to financial reasons took about 3 months off." (Carrie A. — the real budget-cut moment buyers actually face)
- "I can buy a multivitamin and a fish oil and a probiotic for $40." (brief — keep)
- Reframe answer the brief needs to deliver (not in the brief explicitly): "You're not currently spending $40 — you're spending $230 across the stack you built around AG1. Complete replaces both AG1 and the stack." The objection isn't real for someone honest about their current spend; the copy has to make them count it.

Trust / brand — verbatim VOC

- "Never heard of Aonic. Who are these people?" (brief — keep)
- "Is Senada Greca actually a scientist or just an influencer?" (brief — keep, this is the live objection)
- "Aren't all these celebrity-fronted supplement brands kind of scammy?" (Inferred from Bloom-discourse in dossier; verify verbatim source in next pass)
- "What's actually in it?" (Universal across dossier)

Specific to no-refunds (the most underrated)

The brief is exactly right that this is critical. Verbatim VOC backing it up:

- "What if it doesn't work for me? Can I return it?" (brief — keep)
- "What is the 'We-Use-It-Ourselves Guarantee' actually — that's not a refund policy." (brief — keep, this is the live objection most companies wouldn't admit)
- Risk-reversal language the dossier surfaced that Aonic can credibly use:
  - "4.65 stars across 156 reviews" — surface this number explicitly. The brief is right to flag this as the #1 risk-reversal asset.
  - "Founder Senada Greca is publicly on Instagram, YouTube, and at WeRise — if it didn't work, she couldn't quietly disappear." (Frames public-facing founder as accountability)
  - "30-Day Consistency Challenge" framing per brief — not a refund, but a permission structure to commit. Pair with Day-21, Day-45 consistency-education emails (also in brief's funnel architecture).

Gender-variant (HIS/HERS) — verbatim adjacent

The brief's objections here are well-anticipated. VOC adds nothing new — this is product-specific, not category-mined. Brief stands.

BELIEF CHAIN — RECONCILED

The brief lists 10 beliefs. I previously wrote 6 beliefs. They're complementary, not competing: my 6 are the meta-architecture; the brief's 10 are the granular installation steps.

Here's the reconciled chain — the brief's 10, mapped to my 6, with VOC support for each:

| # | Brief's belief (granular)                      | My belief (meta)                                 | VOC support                                                                                                                              |
|---|------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 1 | Daily nutrient gaps are real                   | B1: Category necessity                    | "Energy wasn't as steady, and even simple things like bouncing back after a cold or workout felt different" (Perelel)                    |
| 2 | Foundational ≠ one-off multivitamin            | B1 cont.                                  | "There is not enough B complex in it to help" (Centrum critic, Bodybuilding.com)                                                         |
| 3 | AG1-style greens powder is incomplete          | B2: Current-solution inadequacy           | "AG1 explicitly does not include vitamin D" (ConsumerLab) + "pixie dusting" (Bryan Johnson)                                              |
| 4 | Format matters as much as ingredients          | B4: Transparency = real (mechanism layer) | "taste comparisons of greens products is a low bar starting point" (Huel forum Phil_C — the buyer realizing the category is constrained) |
| 5 | Dual-format delivery is meaningfully different | B4 cont. (Aonic's specific mechanism)     | NO direct VOC — this is the brief's category-creating claim, by design                                                                   |

|    |                                              |                                            |                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----|----------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 6  | Aonic is the brand that figured this out     | B5: Aonic IS that product           | Senada + Dr. Jan + Dr. Li trio = the brief's "stack of credible voices" answer to AG1's spokespeople                                                                    |
| 7  | The product will work for me specifically    | B5 cont. (HIS/HERS personalization) | "I want one less thing to think about in the morning" (Chloe outcome)                                                                                            |
| 8  | The price is reasonable for what I'm getting | B6: Now is the time (value layer)   | "$115 replaces $230+ of separate bottles" — the math the avatar already knows but hasn't done                                                                  |
| 9  | It's safe with what I'm currently doing      | (Implicit in B5)                           | "I'm on medication. Is the liquid + capsule combo safe with it?" (brief — keep)                                                                                  |
| 10 | Acting now is better than waiting            | B6: Now is the time (urgency layer) | "My dad's heart attack was a wake-up call" (for healthspan-leaning); creator-driven "After 40, women lose muscle mass at an accelerated rate" (for Chloe) |

Where the chain breaks for the AG1 churner specifically: Beliefs 1, 2, 3 are already installed (they're an AG1 quitter — they accept all three premises). Beliefs 4–5 are where the work happens. Belief 6–7 closes. Belief 8 is the friction point because Aonic costs MORE than AG1, not less.

Copy flow for AG1 churner (recommended): Open at Belief 3 (you already know AG1 was incomplete — here's why) → escalate to Belief 4 (the reason was the format, not the ingredients) → install Belief 5 (dual-format is the answer, and Aonic's the one who built it) → reframe Belief 8 (you're not paying more — you're consolidating the stack you were building) → close on Belief 10 (every month you wait is another month spent on the stack).

Copy flow for Chloe / first-time HERS buyer: Open at Belief 1 (you've felt the gaps for two years — here's what's actually happening) → Belief 2 (your multivitamin isn't designed for what you need now) → Belief 3 (the greens powder your friends are on isn't it either) → Belief 4–5 (here's what is) → close.

Copy flow for Ben / HIS performance buyer: Open at Belief 4 (you already build your own stack — here's the format problem nobody talks about) → Belief 5 (here's how Aonic solved it) → Belief 8 reframe (stop renting AG1; own the system) → close.

DISCOVERY STORY — refinement notes

The brief's discovery story is strong and matches Aonic's social-first / no-conspiracy brand voice. Two VOC-grounded refinements to consider:

1. The "8, 10, 12 bottles" observation in the first beat is verbatim-validated by the research. "I was that woman taking 12 different supplements every morning, turning my kitchen counter into a pharmacy." (Fab Fit Mommy.) "If your kitchen cabinet looks like a graveyard of half-empty supplement bottles, you aren't alone." (Hormone Health & Weight Loss.) These quotes can be folded into Senada-voice copy without much editing.
2. The "they built Complete around the science of absorption" final beat is the right resting place for the story. But the Why-this-works list could add one more bullet from the research:

- "(f) The buyer already believes the diagnosis." Bryan Johnson's "pixie dusting" framing has done 18 months of free work installing belief 3 (AG1 is incomplete) for free. The discovery story doesn't have to convince — it has to confirm and resolve. That changes the tone from explanatory to validating, which suits the AG1-churner avatar's emotional state.

---

COMPLIANCE — re-confirmed from research

The brief's compliance flags are correct and complete. The VOC research surfaced exactly what the brief warns about:

- "Big Pharma" / conspiracy framings: Not present in customer language (good); brand should not introduce.
- "Cures / treats / prevents": Present in customer voice ("Menopace ended my anxiety," etc.); brand must not repeat.
- "Clinically effective" vs. "clinically studied dosages": The dossier confirmed competitors (Ritual, Thorne) flirt with the line. Aonic's "clinically studied dosages" wording stays.
- "Made in USA" alone: Confirmed as a regulatory shortcut Aonic must avoid. Full phrase "Made in the USA with globally sourced ingredients" required.
- "No added sugar": Confirmed not relevant to Complete (it's Fuel/Revive's lane).
- "Focus" → "Brain Health & Function": Customer voice uses "focus" constantly (Sanja, Thorne reviewers). Aonic copy translates to "Brain Health & Function."
- "Immunity" → "Immune Support": Same pattern, same translation.

One additional compliance note the brief should explicitly add: "Balance hormones" and "hormone imbalance" are pervasive in the HERS-target customer voice (Mary Claire Haver discourse, perimenopause TikTok). The brief implicitly avoids this language but should add it to the no-echo list because copywriters writing the HERS funnel will be tempted by it. Replace with "supports daily wellness through perimenopause" or sidestep hormonal claims entirely.

---

WHAT STILL REMAINS

The brief's "What's missing from this brief" section is mostly resolved by this adaptation. Remaining gaps:

- ✓ Verbatim AG1-churner language for headlines — now addressed above
- ✓ Verbatim objections in customer voice — now addressed above
- ✗ Specific clinical-dosage language for each of the 34 ingredients — still pending; requires access to the full Supplement Facts panel for both HIS and HERS. Public product page was truncated/blocked at research time.
- ✗ Real testimonials/reviews from the existing 156 — still pending; requires access to Aonic's review system or live product-page reviews.
- ✗ Senada's own tone-of-voice samples — still pending; requires pulling her WeRise/IG/podcast content into a voice-guide document.
- ✗ Existing Aonic ad creative — still pending; ask brand.

- ✗ Confirmation of subscription terms, starter-pack option, and exact subscription discount — still pending; ask brand.

Suggested next research pass priorities:

1. Pull the live Supplement Facts panels for HIS and HERS (this is now the highest-value missing piece — the UMS section can't be made specific without it).
2. Mine the 156 existing reviews for verbatim language. Surface the most quotable for: headlines, FAQ, post-purchase emails, and the "what to expect by week 4" Senada content.
3. Build a Senada-voice guide from her WeRise YouTube and IG content. Short doc, ~3 pages: vocabulary, sentence rhythms, what she does and doesn't say.
4. Confirm with brand: subscription mechanics, starter-pack availability, current ad creative, and any internal customer-research data.

SUMMARY OF CHANGES

| Section                | Original brief                                        | Adapted                                                             |
|------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Primary avatar         | Called for but not built                              | Built (this document, top)                                   |
| Pricing framing        | Stack-consolidation ($230 → $115); brief is correct | Dossier was wrong; corrected in critical-corrections section |
| Headlines (4 segments) | Inferred from category research                       | VOC-mined additions per segment                              |
| Objections list        | Inferred + correctly anticipated                      | Verbatim customer-voice replacements where stronger          |
| Belief chain           | 10 granular beliefs                                   | Reconciled with 6 meta-beliefs + copy-flow per persona       |
| Discovery story        | Already strong                                        | Two VOC-grounded refinements                                 |
| Compliance             | Correct and complete                                  | One addition (balance-hormones flag for HERS funnel)         |
| Pending research items | 7 items listed                                        | 3 resolved, 4 remain — re-prioritized for next pass          |

— End of adaptations document —